Triangle Economics of Education Workshop: Call for Papers

Virtual Conference
Thursday, December 10, 2020

Hosted by: Center for Child & Family Policy
Sanford School of Public Policy, Duke University

The second annual Triangle Economics of Education Workshop (TEEW) will bring together researchers to present and discuss empirical research on the economics of education.

Professor Stephanie Riegg Cellini (George Washington University) will deliver a keynote address.

We welcome paper submissions on a broad range of topics including (but not limited to):

- Early childhood education
- Financial aid and student debt
- Higher education finance, governance, and accountability
- K-12 interventions and student outcomes (academic and non-academic)
- Long-run effects of education on adult outcomes (e.g., employment, wages, health)
- Postsecondary access, enrollment, and persistence
- Racial/ethnic and economic segregation in schools
- School accountability
- School choice
- School finance
- Teacher training, performance, and evaluation
- Teacher labor markets

Please submit your papers for consideration by October 2, 2020. To submit a paper, please email it in .pdf format to sarah.komisarow@duke.edu. Paper submissions should be full-length, include an abstract, and not yet be published. Authors of accepted papers will be notified by mid-October.

The workshop will be held online with password-protected access limited to those who pre-register. While we welcome submissions from authors outside of the Triangle-area of North Carolina, priority will be given to early career researchers and researchers with local affiliations.

Registration information and a preliminary program will be available on this website in late October: https://childandfamilypolicy.duke.edu/event/triangle-economics-of-education-workshop-3/
